ANALYSIS

Illegal migration to and through Libya

Since the beginning of this year some 30000 migrants have crossed illegally to Europe. While the greatest number usually comes from Africa, according to United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees UNHCR, a quarter of those crossing the Mediterranean Sea were Syrian refugees and asylum seekers. UNHCR confirmed that 7500 of those who managed to cross alive to Europe are Syrian followed by Somali migrants and asylum seekers.

Eritrean asylum seekers face flee cross the borders illegally to Sudan, and then to Libya to take a boat to Europe.
Illegal migration to and through Libya

Somali asylum seekers facing continuation of instability cross the borders to Ethiopia then to Sudan before crossing to Libya. Noteworthy to mention that smugglers have a network that is active in all the mentioned countries.

Syrian refugees and asylum seekers started arriving in Libya; there are close to 10,000 Syrian refugees and asylum seekers according to UNHCR.

Libya represents an attractive destination for many reasons; lack of adequate border control, flourishing smuggling business and the geographical closeness to Southern Europe. The Libyan government in many occasions raised its intention to control the borders; especially the Southern areas.

Many reports about boat crossing from Libya to Europe emerged and, in October, hundreds of migrants lost their lives while attempting to cross illegally to Europe.

The EU came under mounting pressure at the weekend to relieve a worsening refugee emergency in the Mediterranean, as leaders of southern member states called for urgent action to prevent the sea becoming a "tomb" for thousands fleeing north from Libya to Malta or Italy. The Italian and Maltese prime ministers insisted that the EU tackle the boat people issue at its coming summit.

With Libya an important transit point for African migrants to Europe, Eubam is already acting to strengthen the Libyan authorities’ ability to manage border crimes, including trafficking of people and illegal migration. The EU border control agency, Frontex, is reported to be planning concrete activities in Libya under Eubam’s flag.

Libyan authorities’ difficulty to control borders is perceived as the main cause of the movement of boat migrants to Europe. Hence, border control, especially of port, are very important. The EUBAM has been working closely with the Libyan authorities, but the border control needs more of a regional African action and cooperation between Libya and its African neighbors; especially Sudan, Chad and Niger. The issue needs a broader focus on countries of origin, and the European Union as a major donor needs to pay more attention to development in these countries.

The African Union as the regional Organization has always been aware of this issue. In this line it has already convened a workshop in Tripoli, in early September to enhance cooperation and coordination between Sahel-Saharan states to improve the border’s security in the sub-region.

3 – Transitional Justice and Rule of Law

- Judicial Reform: Libya’s recently-established Trial Monitoring Network has been given a boost with training to help it tackle the technical challenges of observing trials in Libya. The Trial Monitoring Network was set up in June by 17 Libyan lawyers, following a series of meetings, field trips and reform.

- The Grand Mufti, Sheikh Sadik Al-Ghariani, has issued a fatwa saying that female teachers in schools and colleges must cover their faces if they are teaching males who have reached puberty. He made the ruling following a request for advice from the Ministry of Education on the issue. It had said that some female teachers were veiling their faces while giving lessons but it felt that this was having a negative impact on students’ understanding because, by not seeing the teacher’s face, they were not able to interact and properly learn. It is not clear where this leaves the Ministry of Education.
